1. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

2. Claim 6 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over the German patent to Wallers (DE003406455A1) in view of Sakurai et al. '845.

Waller's shows a cantilevered saw blade having all of the recited limitations including a saw frame (4), a slider crank drive (6), a feeder conveyor (11), a cantilevered blade (2), an conveyor motor (15), a controlling system (21) having a "stored control program" (39) and a signal transmitter (e.g. 9,26).

Waller's elements are all mechanical. However, it has long been held to be obvious to update old mechanical machinery with modern electronics, usually because the electronics are cheaper and need not be specially manufactured for the given situation, but instead need only be programmed. Sakurai shows that it is well known to have a sensor (41) to monitor blade speed, to send an electronic signal to a computer controller, and to use that information to control how the work is fed (33) relative to the tool. Given Sakurai's general teaching that sawing machine workfeed should be controlled by such a system, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art to have modified Wallers by replacing his outdated mechanical control system with a more modern electronic system. The advantages of an electronic system are set forth in Sakurai and many other sawing systems. A further example of the advantages are the ability to input the material of the workpiece and therewith select from a variety of programs for cutting different materials at different speeds.

3. Claim 8 is allowed.

4. Applicant's arguments have been fully considered but they are not persuasive.

Applicant argues that neither Wallers nor Sakurai show the elements of subparagraphs E and F of claim 6, namely a programmed controller and a signal transmitter for sensing a specified crank position. However, Wallers does shows a mechanical control system that is designed (programmed) to perform the same function as Applicant's claimed programmed controller, and Waller's also shows a signal transmitter (e.g. 9,26) that mechanically transmits the crank position to the controller (21). The conversion of such archaic mechanical elements to the modern electronic equivalents is not only obvious, it is ubiquitous in the art, with every imaginable machine tool having it's outdated mechanical parts replaced with cheaper electronic equivalents, as exemplified by Sakurai.

5. THIS ACTION IS MADE FINAL. Applicant is reminded of the extension of time policy as set forth in 37 CFR 1.136(a).

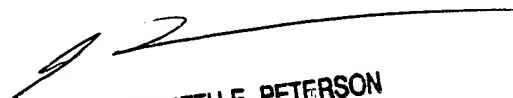

A shortened statutory period for reply to this final action is set to expire THREE MONTHS from the mailing date of this action. In the event a first reply is filed within TWO MONTHS of the mailing date of this final action and the advisory action is not mailed until after the end of the THREE-MONTH shortened statutory period, then the shortened statutory period will expire on the date the advisory action is mailed, and any extension fee pursuant to 37 CFR 1.136(a) will be calculated from the mailing date of the advisory action. In no event, however, will the statutory period for reply expire later than SIX MONTHS from the mailing date of this final action.
